

Summary :

The reason for our choice of the thesis is the events that are taking place in the international system, there are countries that are going up and down, oil prices fluctuate between collapse and ascent, arms race, spending billions of dollars on military arsenals, inflated military spending, alliances and partnerships, destructive wars, the past and the unknown future, all these events will make security for all countries threatened without exception, and the absolute security hypothesis becomes a fantasy, everyone is afraid of all and everyone doubts the intentions of all. Everyone, a total chaos in the world, all events that make the specialists in the political literature to find and persevere to know how the world works and how this system, which is called the international system, works, they know the easy thing about what will happen tomorrow, so we are keen to get as far away as possible on the topics that have been dealt with so frequently and consumed; The second is the strategic balance between this party and that there is the security dilemma, and this equation must result in a future situation for that balance or that system, it was very important to study each other in private to reach the goal of the thesis.

After the study finished its first chapter, it went on to study the concept of the international system in terms of its structure and its factors, and the challenges it faces, if it can be said that the period after the emergence of the nation state is the birth of this system, which passed in many forms, to turn after the end of the cold war into a system of unipolarity, and just as the forms of this system have changed as well the situation and numbers of actors in it, after the states were the only actors in it today there are many factors In terms of number and form, as the number of countries has increased and the forms of factors have varied between countries, organizations, companies and individuals, this diversity has given many characteristics to the international system, including inclusiveness and heterogeneity in addition to chaos, and many challenges have emerged in the face of this international system, which has caused instability and a breakdown of security in it .

In assessing the policy of these countries, we believe that the U.S. foreign policy was driven by the realization that China is an adversary that must be neutralized and removed from the circle of competition, while it viewed The Russian Federation as a force that is not a threat to it, and it has somewhat neglected the issues in the Middle East and removed Europe from its priorities a little, and the American policy under U.S. President Donald Trump was raising the slogan "America First" in a reference to American interests should be in. In fact, this matter or this strategy is the strategy of all previous U.S. administrations and even the next did not prove previous experiences that any American administration came to power did not prioritize American interests and did not give preference to it, the United States of America did not consider the rise of China as a peaceful rise, but its hostile upwards based on damage to American interests and starting from the theft of intellectual property and industrial domination, which ultimately leads to damage to the U.S. economy, so the United States was determined to address this, and worked to impose economic sanctions on China and go toward trade and economic wars with it, and try to thwart China's promising initiative of belt and road initiative, thwart China's aspirations on the black continent and the Middle East and sow obstacles to Sino-Russian cooperation. On the other hand, China and Russia have declared on more than one occasion that the current international order must change, and the way the United States deals with events must change and the management of international affairs should be based on participation rather than exclusivity and hegemony, and both countries have sought to increase their international standing, as China has been able to be a major international force that is significant and to a lesser extent Russia.

At the end of the research we tried to develop some possible scenarios for the future of the strategic balance to nominate one of those scenes that we found closer to the current international reality and at the very least for the next few years, and at the end of this effort, which we did not alone have the credit for and through the search and investigation processes we reached conclusions that have been developed accurately and carefully from our point of view, so that they find a way to provide assistance to those who need assistance in this regard.
