

Al-Alemain Institute for Higher Studies Department of International Studies

Islamic University

International Terrorism & its Effect on the Economic Development

Afghanistan & Iraq as an Example

A latter

In Partial Fulfillments for M.A. degree in International studies

By

Khalid Mohammed Tahir Shubar

Supervised by

Asst.Prof. Dr. Hasan Latef K.

1434A.H.

2013A.D.

International Terrorism & its Effect on the Economic Development

Afghanistan & Iraq as an Example

Abstract

Terrorism became one of the political features of the society after the rise of the national countries where it had the greatest effect on the peoples of the world and especially the poor countries which suffer from low levels of development and economic deterioration leading to have terrorist movements in their countries. Then those countries were forced to announce war on terrorism. Due to its effect on the international relations which is governed by interests and policies and in an attempt to reach scientific results in this study which help clearing the ambiguity attached to the concept of terrorism as well as attempting to reveal its negative effects on the developmental tracks within the countries having such problem. Therefore, Iraq and Afghanistan were the example which the researcher studied.

The study came in three chapters with a conclusion and an introduction. The first chapter discussed the conceptual frame of development and terrorism. As for the second chapter, it is dedicated to tackle the political, economic and social reality of the studied countries to reach the main reasons that led to their involvement in the war against terrorism through reviewing the reality and revealing its effect on the construction of the society in the studied countries.

Finally, the third chapter dealt with the hopes for the future of development within the studied countries in the light of the adopted scenarios which came as a result to the reality of both countries and predicting their future in the light of the changes that took place in their reality with revealing the expectations of the future.