

Abstract

Abstract

The best goal for all peoples in this world is to elect their ruler who would represent them. This goal remains a historical fact and a public demand regardless how many years it takes to achieve it.

The power is represented by the personality of the President who practices this power and losing this power results from absence of this President. The history shows that the colonial countries justified their occupation for other countries by the principle of the International Law (Land without ruler). This reason presents the President as an essential element in the equation of land and people.

The US presidency is considered as the oldest among the presidencies of the modern world that started about 200 years ago. The US is considered a pioneer in the scientific and civilized world which regulate rules of electing the US President.

The ruling system, which provides huge authorities for the president that makes him the only dominant power on the affairs of the state, is known as the presidential ruling system. This presidential system is adopted in the US.

The power and authorities granted for the US President makes him powerful in drawing the policy of his country as well as policies of other countries in the world and for this reason all the world remains eager to know winner of the US elections.

The political analysts in the world remain closely watching these results and reactions of the elected president.

The US electoral system is different from other democratic ruling systems in the world according to the elections mechanism and numeric representation mechanism that result in selecting the new US President.

In general, elections is the most democratic means of choosing the rulers, presidents or political, cultural or social groups. Elections also represent the most current favorite style for changing ruling systems or easing the process of change to sustain principle of peaceful hand-out of power.

Presidential elections definitely represent a crucial factor for shaping political and constitutional life of each country. Process of electing the president of the state is different from a country to another according to the electoral system adopted in the constitution of the state.

Abstract

The political system in the US adopted a special process of electing the president through a public indirect polling system. It is unique since most of the voters in the US believe they directly elect their president but actually the final word is up to electoral community.

This electoral system has been adopted in the US when the American constitution was set in 1787a.m. and this constitution states that if the electoral community could not reach a majority, the decision should be referred to the Congress to elect the president.

Procedures of nomination are different from those adopted in other democratic systems in the world. In the US, the system is called preliminary direct elections which is used in the US only.

In the US, the President is the only national elected political leader coming from either Democratic Party or the Republican Party which dominate presidential elections as well as the congress elections thus the party to achieve the majority will decide the policy of the executive or the legislative powers.

This paper will discuss the presidential style of the US elections as well as means of electing the President of the US in order to form a real power and an essential factor of the democratic ruling system.